Stolen Childhood Eladie PIERRON

Consequences of violence during childhood, parents' responsibility, friendship, resilience, fear, anger

collection HUMANISTES EN VEZVE

It is a true life story concerning a very grave question: the violences done to children and their impact of their future. Without falling in pathos, the author shows us that it is possible to go over and succeed in life.

From 13 years old to adult

Everything started when I was five or six years old, at the time we moved out. Manon, my little sister, was three years old then. She had blond and very thin hair, never combed, and a beautiful pair of blue-green eyes. We had always looked like each other. We both were happy to leave the building in which we were living. The new house had a second floor and a large garden all in lengths.

I remember there were many construction works to do before we could move in.

Daddy was a worker and Monny didn't work at all. They agreed that my maternal grandmother would live with us, to contribute to the house financing. We called this grandmother Granny. Small but always with a smiley face, it was a pleasure to have her at home.

Elodie is seven years old when her life switches.

Why a simple moving can be the beginning of hell?

Why don't her parents help her ?

During all her childhood, she knows moments of fear, anger and also happiness...

This testimony shows us that children who suffer from the human violence grow up too quick and are stolen from a part of their childhood.
