For ages 8 and older

It is a sweet little detective novel
for young readers, full of twists
with endearing pets as heroes,
alternately funny, tender
and redoubtably efficient.

"THE PYRENEES, I SAW THE PYRENEES!" YELLED NICOLAS.

I was dozing up between him and Clara, then, I looked up towards the front of the car: what was happening now?

"We are here!"

I looked outside. A mountain chain had just appeared at the bend of the road. Pointy highs, thousands firs and the snow as white as my fur of Scottish terrier: it was beautiful! Nicolas unbuckled his belt and began to dance, singing:

"We are here, we are here!"

THE AUTHOR JEAN LOUIS JOUANNEAUD

Paris region

He spent all his childhood in the middle of the Sahara, among impressive piles of books he quickly read.

Years later, he became a teacher and in turn began to write stories, most often for his students.

One day, one of them asked why he did not “made” books. So, he wrote a first book, then another and even more after. Today, even though he no longer has students, he still creates stories for his great pleasure and, of course, others’.

THE ILLUSTRATOR KATIA HUMBERT

Lorraine

Katia identifies herself as an optimistic visual artist. She loves discovering the morning when it is sunny.

She does not like to do the same thing every day, especially during grey nights.

She likes shellfish with lemon and parsley and she dislikes any kind of sprouts, Brussels sprouts or anything else.

She loves swimming with her head under water, because it is as if her ears were wrapped in cotton wool, and it is so soft.

However, she does not like riding up hills with a bike, at all, it is way too hard.
